Lamb's Succory

Archaeophyte

GB: Regionally Extinct

England: Extinct

Somerset: Lost

An annual of poor sandy soil in arable fields, formerly at scattered sites in east and southeast England. Apart from a deliberate introduction in Suffolk, this species was last recorded in 1971 and is now considered extinct (Preston et al., 2002). The only record for Somerset was a mention by Watson (1835), listing Somerset as a location, on the authority of A. Gapper. This species has never been recorded in Somerset since.
